Client acquisition carries a commitment to consistently expand on the width of one's reach to potential clients. The assumption: get the quantity and you will find the quality. Is this really true? Is there real efficiency in such an approach? How to grow with quality and control? Are there better ways that we can actually run a quality clients-based business in Private Banking with a better crafted out clients-acquisition strategy?

The following course introduces participants to key factors that challenge Private Bankers to consider how they are growing their centre of influence for client acquisition and who and where to extend this reach. It will provide practical but insightful perspectives for PBs to evaluate their present practices and explore new practices or initiatives that will grow their businesses. For those who are already succeeding in their trade, the session may provide more thoughts for them, or even assist them with a systematic approach to better peer-inspire their fellow bankers.
